This limited, finite series is based on the substantive outputs from a major, multi-disciplinary research project funded by the Wellcome Trust, investigating the meanings, treatment, and uses of the criminal corpse in Britain. It is a vehicle for methodological and substantive advances in approaches to the wider history of the body. Focussing on the period between the late seventeenth and the mid-nineteenth centuries as a crucial period in the formation and transformation of beliefs about the body, the series explores how the criminal body had a prominent presence in popular culture as well as science, civic life and medico-legal activity. It is historically significant as the site of overlapping and sometimes contradictory understandings between scientific anatomy, criminal justice, popular medicine, and social geography.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The book is based on research carried out as part of the research programme “Harnessing the Power of the Criminal Corpse”, funded by the Wellcome Trust (grant WT095904AIA). I am very grateful to the Wellcome Trust for their support and assistance—financial and practical. I also thank the other participants in the programme: Elizabeth Hurren, Peter King, Richard Ward, Zoë Dyndor, Shane McCorristine, Owen Davies, Francesca Matteoni, Floris Tomasini, Rachel Bennett and Emma Battell Lowman. Many thanks to Emily Russell and Rowan Milligan at Palgrave and to Steve Poole for his extremely helpful comments on the first version of this book. Thanks to Adam Barker for invaluable assistance with the index. Most images are my own, unless otherwise specified.
